FOURTEENTH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

Is 66:10–14c / Gal 6:14–18
Lk 10:1–12, 17–20 or 10:1–9

Scientists and theologians sometimes work the same cases.

A friend of mine finished his graduate studies and did a year of postdoctoral work in the northwest. He's a moral theologian specializing in medical ethics.

He's no armchair coach, looking at life from the sidelines: Not long after ordination, he spent time as a hospital chaplain, and he's done night-shift ride-alongs with police officers, learning about human nature from people on the street as well as from those in the squad cars.

He also worked in a facility that housed criminal offenders undergoing psychiatric treatment, spending hours in group sessions led by the prison's psychiatrist. At times they discussed inner voices they had followed, voices that had led them to commit crimes.

My friend remembered vividly one conversation with the doctor after a meeting. My friend said, "These men hear voices. The founder of my religious order heard voices. From a psychiatric point of view, how do we know whether to lock people up or call them saints?" The psychiatrist had a simple response: "It depends what the voices tell them."

If you murder another human being, we'll lock you up. If you sell everything you own and give the money to the poor, we'll call you a saint. A lot of people may be challenged to follow your example.

I'm intrigued that my friend still tells this story decades after the fact. What message is worth spreading? What insight is worth handing on year after year? Real wisdom—truths tested against real human experience—shows where the voice of God has resonated in human hearts.
